Music and visual art have long shared a natural dialogue, each deepening the experience of the other. Rhythm, tone, color, and composition move across disciplines, allowing artists to translate sound into image and image into sound. Musicians often draw on visual landscapes to shape interpretation, while visual artists respond to the emotional and structural qualities of music, creating work that echoes its movement and mood.

It is for this dynamic interplay that Music at Kohl Mansion (MAKM) in Burlingame and Art Bias in San Carlos – both longstanding nonprofits deeply committed to community building through the arts – are pleased to collaborate on this exhibition: Brushstrokes & Bowstrings. The artists featured here have each been named MAKM's Visual Artist of the Season in recent years, selected for their distinctive ability to translate sound and melody into visual form, rendering music perceptible and giving tangible presence to what is otherwise intangible.
